Kindness of others saved my son: Father

Trinidadian dad gives thanks for CHEO and service groups

 SEAN MCKIBBON

Chanka Mangroo is a single dad, he home schools his seven-year-old son Justin, and on Tuesday Justin had life-saving heart surgery at the Children's Hospital of Eastern Ontario.

"I have a lot of people to be thankful for," says Mangroo. "Every day I pray to God and say thank you for them."

Justin was diagnosed in his native Trinidad at three months of age with a congenital heart defect. At seven months, he had his first life-saving surgery, having a shunt put in that would help blood flow between his lungs and his heart, says Mangroo.

Justin would need more surgeries as time went on, surgery that kept getting put off in Trinidad until at age six, Justin got very sick and was hospitalized.

"He was pronounced dead on arrival," says Mangroo, explaining his son was revived with a defibrillator. It was only thanks to the help of community groups such as the Caribbean Hummingbirds, the Knights of Columbus and a CHEO doctor, Dr. Gyaandeo Maharaj, who hails from Trinidad and Tobago and heard about Justin's plight, that Justin was able to get the surgery he needed, says Mangroo. He added the Trinidad and Tobago High Commission also played a key role too in helping Justin get to CHEO.

Justin's surgery Tuesday was planned following an emergency surgery in 2011. On Sunday, after having spent three days in CHEO's ICU Justin was happily playing video games.

"I'm feeling good," said Justin Sunday afternoon. "My chest and my belly are feeling better."

He said his sleep at night has gotten better and he can now eat whatever he wants.

"He can explain the whole thing to you. He's an amazing young boy," said Mangroo. "It hasn't affected his intelligence or schooling."

They plan to travel back to Trinidad later this month.

'71-'73. New sex abuse charges for retired priest

A former Catholic priest was back in court in Ottawa to hear six new sex-abuse charges against him, stemming back to the 1970s.

Appearing in court Friday morning, Jacques Faucher, 76, faced six additional counts of gross indecency and indecent assault by the Ottawa police's sexual assault and child-abuse unit. The charges related to an investigation involving three men.

On Feb. 14, Aylmer resident Faucher faced two counts of the same charges, after an investigation that began in November 2012 into Preparations were underway last night for a three-day tournament pitting the best of Ontario's female high school volleyball teams against one another, but the labour strife between the government and teachers likely kept some teams out of the tournament, an organizer said.

There are 20 schools attending the round-robin tournament which will be staged at De La Salle, Samuel-Genest and La Cité Collégiale Monday to Wednesday. Four local high schools made the cut, including De La Salle, Samuel-Genest, L'Escale and Gisèle-Lalonde.

Seffner, Fla. Heirlooms recovered from family home ruined by sinkhole

Crews on Sunday razed more than half of the Tampa-area home perched over a huge sinkhole that swallowed a man three days ago, managing to salvage some keepsakes for family members who lived there.

The house had been owned by Leland Wicker since the 1970s.

The operator of the heavy equipment worked gingerly. Family belongings were scooped onto the lawn in hopes of salvaging parts of the family's 40-year history in the home.

As of Sunday afternoon — when demolition had stopped for the day and only a few walls of the home remained — a Bible, family photos, a jewelry box and a pink teddy bear were among the items saved. Firefighters were also

Gastroenteritis. Queen Elizabeth hospitalized for first time in a decade

Britain's Queen Elizabeth II was hospitalized on Sunday over an apparent stomach infection that has ailed her for days, a rare instance of ill health sidelining the long-reigning monarch. Elizabeth will have to cancel a visit to Rome and other engagements as she recovers, and outside experts said she may have to be rehydrated intravenously.

Buckingham Palace said the 86-year-old queen had experienced symptoms of gastroenteritis and was being examined at London's King Edward VII Hospital — the first time in a decade that Elizabeth has been hospitalized.

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The symptoms of gastroenteritis — vomiting and diarrhea — usually pass after one or two days, although they can be more severe in older people. Dehydration is a common complication.

The illness was first announced on Friday, and Elizabeth had to cancel a visit to Swansea, Wales, on Saturday to present leeks, a national symbol, to soldiers of the Royal Welsh Regiment. She instead spent the day trying to recover at Windsor Castle, but appears to have had trouble kicking the bug.

Baby may be second person cured of AIDS

Mississippi. Aggressive treatment just after birth left child healthy a year off medication

A baby born with AIDS appears to have been cured, scientists announced on Sunday. The child from Mississippi is now two and a half and has been off medication for about a year with no signs of infection.

There's no guarantee the child will remain healthy, although testing uncovered just traces of the virus's genetic material still lingering. If so, it would mark only the world's second reported cure.

A doctor gave this baby faster and stronger treatment than usual, starting a three-drug infusion within 30 hours of birth. That was before tests confirmed the infant was infected and not just at risk from a mother whose HIV wasn't diagnosed until she was in labour.

The child responded well through age 18 months, when the family temporarily quit returning and stopped treatment, researchers said. When they returned several months later, remarkably, standard tests came back negative.

Ten months after treatment stopped, a battery of supersensitive tests at half a dozen laboratories found no sign of the virus's return.

The fast action apparently knocked out HIV in the baby's blood before it could form hideouts in the body. Those so-called reservoirs of dormant cells usually reinfect anyone who stops medication, said Dr. Deborah Persaud of Johns Hopkins Children's Center. She led the investi-

Next, Persaud's team is planning to try to prove that, with more aggressive treatment of other high-risk babies, "maybe we'll be able to block this reservoir seeding," Persaud said.

The Mississippi case shows "there may be different cures for different populations," said

Dr. Rowena Johnston of amFAR, which funded Persaud's team to explore possible cases of pediatric cures.

It also suggests that scientists should look back at other children who have been treated since shortly after birth, including some reports of possible cures in the late 1990s that were dismissed at the time, said Dr. Steven Deeks of the University of California, San Francisco.

Expectant parents die in car crash — but baby survives

A crowd gathers in front of the Brooklyn synagogue where funeral services were held for the expectant parents. VERENA DOBNIK/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

A pregnant young woman who was feeling ill was headed to hospital with her husband early Sunday when their car was hit, killing them both — but their baby boy was born prematurely and survived, authorities and a relative said.

The driver of a BMW slammed into the car carrying Nachman and Raizy Glauber, both 21, at an intersection in the Williamsburg neighbourhood of Brooklyn, said Isaac Abraham, a neighbour of Raizy's parents who lives two blocks from the scene of the crash.

Raizy was thrown from the car and her body landed under a parked tractor-trailer, witnesses said. Nachman was pinned in the car, and emergency workers had to cut off the roof to get him out, witnesses said.

Both were pronounced dead at hospital, police said, and both died of blunt-force trauma, according to the medical examiner.

Their infant son was in serious condition, said Abraham. The hospital did not return calls about the child. The Glaubers' driver was in stable condition, police said. The driver of the BMW and a passenger fled and were being sought, police said.

On Saturday, Raizy was "not feeling well," so they decided to go to the hospital, said Sara Glauber, Nachman's cousin. Abraham said the Glaubers called a car service because they didn't own a car.

The Glaubers were married about a year ago and had begun a life together in Williamsburg, where Raizy grew up in a prominent Satmar Orthodox Jewish rabbinical family, Sara said.

Jewish law calls for burial of the dead as soon as possible, and hours after their deaths, the Glaubers were mourned at a funeral on Sunday afternoon. Dozens gathered shoulder to shoulder on the street outside a synagogue.

Afterward, the cars carrying the bodies left and headed to Monsey, where another service was planned in Nachman's hometown.

Horse as the main course

On the menu. What's distasteful to some is more than palatable at Toronto's La Palette

jessica.smith@metronews.ca

Restaurateur Shamez Amlani says he understands being vegan — but refusing to eat horse while chowing down on the noble cow and the friendly pig? That's just "speciesism."

Amlani and his wife opened La Palette on Toronto's Queen West just over 12 years ago. When he first asked his meat supplier to find him horse, there weren't any other restaurants in Toronto serving it. La Palette, he said, offered it clandestinely to customers with a "pssst, we have horsemeat" whisper, rather than putting it on the menu.

Now, horse tartare and two horse main courses are on the menu. Horsemeat, being so lean, is a favourite of athletes but is also so tender his wife calls it "the butter of meats," he said.

As it turns out, we might not eat a lot of horse but we supply a lot of people who do.

Canada exports thousands of kilograms of horsemeat each year.

Amlani said horsemeat squeamishness can be traced to 732, when Pope Gregory III decreed eating horse a "filthy and abominable custom."

"People will have a very schizophrenic approach to why you shouldn't eat it — they'll start by saying they're companion animals, they'll

Taste test

Savouring the tenderest of meats

To me, the horsemeat debate comes down to taste. We eat beef, pork — why not horse?

On to the taste test. La Palette, a French bistro on Queen Street West in Toronto, serves horsemeat.

I started with a tartare — raw horsemeat with onions and seasoning.

I was surprised by how tender horsemeat is, despite being so lean. It's also mild — much milder than beef. I wondered if the seasonings were keeping me from fully tasting the meat. The dish was delicious, but I wanted horse on its own.

The tenderloin gave me that opportunity. Seared on the outside and rare on the inside, it was accompanied by a mushroom-oat risotto, seasonal vegetables and a port reduction. I could've eaten the meat with a spoon, it's so soft. And a little sweet. It won me over.

FERNANDO CARNEIRO

tell you it's bad for you because of (drugs) that might be present in the meat and they'll switch back to, 'But they're so cute,' he said.

Others will encourage a distaste for horsemeat as "the thin edge of the wedge" in their attempts to convert others to veganism.

Amlani knows all about people's objections. His restaurant has been the focus of protests, and sometimes diners walk out when they see horsemeat on the menu.

Arguments in the horsemeat controversy

- Argument: Horses can be mistreated or unethically killed. Last winter, the Toronto Star published an exposé about horses bought at a "kill" auction in the U.S. It followed a trailer of horses that were left without food, water or room to move for 22 hours as they made the trip to an abattoir in Quebec. The Canadian Horse Defence Coalition has secretly filmed some of Canada's abattoirs and found some instances in which horses are improperly killed.

- Counterargument: It's no different than cattle slaughter — humane. Horsemeat proponents argue the process is the same as the slaughter of cattle. Plus, killing a horse for its meat, instead of leaving it improperly cared for at a farm that no longer has use for it, is ultimately more humane.

- Argument: There could be harmful drug residue. Phenylbutazone (PBZ) is an anti-inflammatory given to many horses, especially racehorses, which can end up at abattoirs. The drug can cause serious health problems in humans if ingested.

- Counterargument: Horsemeat is tested. The Canadian Food Inspection Agency (CFIA) has a "zero tolerance for phenylbutazone in food" and conducts random spot tests of horsemeat for residue of the drug, finding "a very high compliance rate" with the law.

Hayfire Roasted Horse Tenderloin with the Foods It Liked Most

- 2 pounds horse tenderloin
- damp hay
- applewood
- 1/4 cup rendered horse suet
- 2 large heirloom carrots
- 2 firm cooking apples
- 1 tbsp fermented oat paste (could substitute miso)
- 2 cups alcoholic dry apple cider
- 2 tbsp apple cider vinegar
- 2 cups finely diced carrots, onions and celery (mirepoix)
- 1 tsp julienned fresh sage leaf
- 10 pounds horse bones
- whole oats
- good butter
- chives

the cooked apples and carrots.

For the horse's oats: Make a stock of horse marrow bones, fermented oat paste and roasted hay. Toast the whole oats in good butter with sage. Add the mirepoix, deglaze with a dry alcoholic apple cider, the cider vinegar and the horse stock. Simmer until oats are tender, adding more stock as necessary. Finish with more good butter, chives, and season to taste.

For the horse reduction: Boil the remaining horse broth with a cup of apple cider until it is thick and sticky. Right before serving add a few spoons of cold butter and whisk to incorporate. Serve each guest a few spoons of the oats, a thick slice of tenderloin, a few slices of apples, carrots and the reduction.

Who's not too sweet to eat?

We asked which animals you would eat. Here's how you voted:

Horsemeat. Big business in Alberta

Canadians consume about 650,000 pounds of horse meat and export about 30 million pounds of it each year, with most coming from the province best known for its cattle.

"Probably two-thirds of the Canadian processing is done in Alberta," said Bill desBarres of the Horse Welfare Alliance of Canada, an advocacy group for the horse-meat industry.

While some might bristle at the thought of slaughtering horses for food, advocates like desBarres believe it's the best end-of-life option for many of the animals.

"It's the most humane option — for horses that qualify — to go to processing," he said. "But the horse must qualify. It can't have phenylbutazone administered in the life of the horse, for instance. That's a painkiller that does not have a designated withdrawal time."

Horses that have consumed other drugs can qualify after spending sufficient time on a feedlot for the drugs to clear their systems, desBarres said.

The Canadian Food Inspection Agency "has zero tolerance for phenylbutazone in food," according to its website, and employs both random and targeted testing of horse meat for the drug and other contaminants.

Other groups, however, like the Canadian Horse Defence Coalition, say it's impossible to guarantee that horses sent for slaughter are free of such drugs. "With such random, scanty testing protocols in place, one can only imagine how many drug-positive horses slip through the cracks," CHDC executive director Sinikka Crosland said in a recent statement.

Bruce Flewelling, who buys and sells horses for meat in Alberta, said processing may be distasteful to some — including his own father, who was an avid horseman — but he prefers it to simply burying or cremating horses at the end of their lives.

"With processing, you get something out of the horse," he said.

METCALFE ST. FIRST IMPRESSIONS

Few are likely to mourn the passing of the squat, plug-ugly bunker on McLeod Street that currently houses the Iraqi embassy.

City council last week signed the death warrant for the two-storey structure, which was built in the 1950s and rendered even more charmless by a steel security fence enclosing the building and parking lot. Council authorized the construction of a modern replacement after its demolition.

The new embassy is to be an irregular-shaped ziggurat design of glass and steel, which city planners believe will highlight the glass "lantern" of the Museum of Nature across the street without upstaging it. The replacement is taller, at four storeys with a penthouse, and won't necessarily include much in the way of trees out front, but it's a prouder piece of work, with a more open face to the street.

If anyone is worried about the loss of the embassy's contribution to the character of the neighbourhood, just around the corner ner and a few blocks up Metcalfe, the shuttered Iranian embassy, complete with its high black metal fence, keeps our diplomatic heritage of hostile, paranoid streetscape very much alive.

The new Iraqi mission, when completed, is likely to change some first impressions of Centretown. As a city report on the embassy proposal points out, the area has always been an important gateway to Parliament Hill and the heart of the city.

"Long-distance travellers have traditionally arrived on the transportation corridor that marks the south boundary of the area — originally the Canadian Atlantic Railway and later its replacement, the Queensway," it says.

Locals may not think of it as such, but Metcalfe Street is the first look at the downtown for many visitors coming off the highway.

The Museum of Nature is an immediate and impressive landmark on the trip downtown, but new arrivals have scant opportunity to appreciate it as anything more than a looming obstacle as they negotiate the multilane detour onto McLeod around its eastern and northern boundary. They'll likely get a better look at Iraq's new digs in passing. In many ways, exiting onto Metcalfe is an accurate introduction to downtown Ottawa — a one-way street intersecting with several others. If you're new to driving downtown, it's best to get used to this local specialty sooner rather than later.

Plans hatched by the NCC in the late 1990s to make Metcalfe more of an official city gateway, to widen it into a boulevard dominated by the Parliament Buildings at one end and the Museum of Nature at the other, never came to pass. The prospect of knocking down so many significant buildings was a major obstacle.

The Mid-Centretown Community Design Plan, though, which goes to council later this month, has raised the possibility of converting Metcalfe, or at least some of it, into a two-way street. This would enable drivers to get a longer look at the made-over Museum of Nature as they drive toward it rather than just glimpsing it in the rear-view mirror. It could also slow the pace of traffic on what often functions as little more than an extended Queensway off-ramp, allowing visitors both behind the wheel and walking a better first impression of downtown Ottawa.

Artist uses canvas as his muse

Matti McLean once hated his body so much that, in his last year of high school, he stopped eating.

Now he's advertising the beauty of the human form by transforming it into a work of art.

Through the Human Canvas Project, established last year, McLean uses his paintbrushes to capture both his subjects' figures and personalities.

Using music, discussion and individual colour choices, McLean tries to tap into each person's individual character and use the body as the canvas it's painted on.

He has created 145 canvases since beginning, he said, adding his work is reaching an audience ranging from Australia to Peru.

Music man. Teacher gathers instruments for Zambian schoolchildren

News worth sharing

Media will always have to report on the tough stuff. But we know that Canada is full of compassionate individuals, inspiring projects and stories worth celebrating. Here's just one.

Todd Snelgrove, a music teacher for almost 20 years, went to Zambia in May 2012 hoping to give away a guitar donated by the Ottawa Folklore Centre.

On the trip, Snelgrove learned of a school that didn't have any musical instruments.

The headmaster enthusiastically invited Snelgrove to come and present the guitar and play some jazz and blues for the students.

"Easily the most spine-tingling performance I have ever put on," Snelgrove says. It was a Bob Marley song that stole the show, though.

"I sang 'Don't worry about a thing,'" Snelgrove says. "And then 300 kids sang back 'Every little thing is going to be all right.'"

Back at home, Snelgrove put out the call for a full set of orchestra instruments for the school and so far has received 100 instruments that will be used to equip not just one but three schools. In the spring, he will travel back to Zambia with the instruments.

To donate instruments, and for information about a benefit concert on March 9, go to instrumentsforafrica.com.

Canadian Screen Awards bewitched by Rebelle

Golden Globes North.

Combo Genies and Geminis event also awards Flashpoint, Laurence Anyways

Rebelle ruled while Flashpoint continued to burn bright at the inaugural Canadian Screen Awards on Sunday, as the best in homegrown film and television gathered for a first-ever joint bash hosted by an off-the-wall Martin Short — who brought along his popular alter ego Ed Grimley.

The Oscar-nominated child-soldier drama Rebelle (or War Witch) dominated the film categories with a whopping 10 trophies, including wins for best film, best director, best screenplay and best actress for its teenage star, Rachel Mwanza. It had been up for 12 awards.

"I'm very touched," said Montreal director Kim Nguyen as he collected the best director prize.

"I'd like to dedicate this to the women in the Congo, their strength, their courage and their resilience."

Meanwhile, perennial TV favourite Flashpoint took the top prizes in the TV race, including best drama and best dramatic actor for star Enrico Colantoni.

The inaugural awards gala celebrated the best in Canadian film and television together for the first time, and Short kicked things off with a musical opening that saw him hoisted by wires to soar over the star-studded audience.

"They had me so high up there I could see both of Mike Duffy's houses," quipped Short, keeping things topical for his Canuck audience.

He later lobbed affectionate barbs at Canadian celebrities Don Cherry, Rick Mercer and The Bachelor Canada winner Brad Smith, and took aim at recent Oscar winner Argo, which earned criticism for downplaying Canada's role in rescuing six U.S. citizens caught up in the 1979 Iran hostage crisis.

"It's always nice to be home," Short said to a star-studded audience.

"I flew in on Air Canada. Or as Ben Affleck calls it, American Airlines." THE CANADIAN PRESS

Best TV drama: Flashpoint

Best TV comedy actor: Gerry Dee, Mr. D

Best TV comedy actress: Wendel Meldrum, Less Than Kind

Best TV drama actress: Meg Tilly, Bomb Girls

Best documentary: Stories We Tell, Sarah Polley

It wasn't exactly a mighty victory, but Jack the Giant Slayer won the weekend at the box office. It had a reported budget of about $200 million.

Downton Abbey. Fourth season has some cast comings and goings

Shirley MacLaine will be returning to Downton Abbey next season, and opera star Kiri Te Kanawa is joining the cast.

MacLaine will reprise her role as Martha Levinson, Lord Robert Crawley's freewheeling American mother-in-law. Carnival Films and Masterpiece on PBS said Saturday. MacLaine appeared in episodes early last season. New Zealand-born soprano Te Kanawa will play a house guest. Another new character is Tom Cullen as Lord Gillingham, described as an old family friend of the Crawleys who visits the family as a guest for a house party (and who might be the one to mend Lady Mary Crawley's broken heart).

Rihanna claims that things are working better now with on-again off-again boyfriend Chris Brown because they've grown up a lot in the four years since his arrest for assaulting her. The singer insists to Elle UK that they

Lindsay Lohan appears to be living it up as much as she can in advance of her March 18 trial — and even skipped out on the latest court appearance related to her case to stay in New York and go clubbing instead, according to Us Weekly. Maybe she knows it doesn't look too good for her this time around when it comes to avoiding jail time, especially considering the drubbing her new lawyer, Mark Heller, has been getting from Judge James Dabney. After dismissing Heller's motions to have the case put on a "slow track," Dabney cautioned that Heller would need someone by his side versed in California law or "Miss Lohan is going to have to

Birthday was the worst day, but they sipped $12K in booze when they were thirsty

Justin Bieber's celebrations for his 19th birthday didn't go so swell Friday, leading the star to tweet a simple, "worst birthday." And while his fans leapt to the conclusion that the paparazzi were responsible, it reportedly had more to do with the security at London's Cirque du Soir nightclub, who wouldn't let some of his entourage in because they couldn't prove they were over 18, according to E! News. Bieber still managed to have some fun — dropping a reported $12,000 on bottle service for his pals — but the incident with security put an early stop to the festivities. "I think Justin and his friends had a good time," a source says. "(But) he was, of course, not amused that some of his close friends were refused entrance."

Kanye West rants about Jay-Z and Justin Timberlake's Grammy performance and their new song, Suit and Tie. Jay-Z now regrets not lending Kanye his new toy train before going on the play date with Justin.

Suri Cruise may have a body double. The Brangelina kids are all sulking in their rooms.

Baby wipes

Not just for bums

Baby wipes are excellent for baby bums, of course. We all know that.

But they are not just for babies anymore. I have found baby wipes to be the perfect eye makeup remover. I ditched my expensive liquid eye makeup remover years ago in favour of the gentle-on-my-skin baby product.

The multi-purpose wipes have a permanent spot in our bathroom for bums, eyes, spills and countertops. I even use them to remove pesky deodorant stains from my clothing.

Fix for the reluctant biker

My little girl just couldn't get the hang of a two-wheeler bicycle — no matter what.

Instead of paying for an expensive glider, we took the pedals and the chain off of her regular bike.

She then learned how to push and glide to get her balance. It worked perfectly to give her the confidence she needed.

Every child should learn this way!

Once she got her balance and we put the chain and pedals back on, she was off, literally, the first time with no help.

Keep your toddler smiling

Indoor activities.

Is your child stuck indoors all day? Here are fun ways to keep the little one entertained

CAROLINE FERNANDEZ
YummyMummyClub.ca

Snow days, rainy days, days I just have to do laundry — we've had a lot of inside time lately. I have been getting creative with my two-year-old and finding lots of fun inside ideas. Here are my top nine.

Wooden spoon + pots = musical madness!

Doing the dishes and toddler driving you crazy? Give him a pot and a wooden spoon. Bang, clash, boom. So simple, yet so entertaining. Mix it up with plastic bowls, stainless steel pots, wooden and metal spoons (the bigger the better). He's learning about beats and music while getting his banging on.

Cardboard box + crayons = artful activity!

I get tons of cardboard box deliveries. A few crayons (washable, of course!) plus his creativity and it makes for the perfect art experience. Lines, squiggles, circles. He's learning about art without even knowing it.

Empty milk jug + soft ball = toddler bowling!

We go through four litres of milk a day (yes, really!), so before I take those milk jugs back for deposit, we re-purpose them into a bit of play. Line them up against a wall, stand back and gently roll (this takes practice) the ball to knock over the jugs. It's a fun physical activity — there is crouching, bending, picking up and running back to knock them down again.

Cars + hands = CRASH!

There is something about crashing things that entertains my toddler to no end. Cars, pillows, teddy bears, two of anything can crash really. It is repetitive and verbal (he sings "crash, crash") and apparently tons of fun.

Fingers + songs = finger songs

Folding laundry and toddler wants your attention? Start singing Head and Shoulders or Wheels on the Bus or The Hokey Pokey. You can do the movements as you fold (whizzing socks around while singing Wheels on the Bus is just organic) and he'll follow along. That's multi-tasking.

Kitchen sink + water = home-

Made water table.

This was my Tuesday. I pulled a chair up to the sink. I filled it with water and dish soap and put in wooden spoons, plastic measuring cups and some clean plastic yogurt containers. My son instinctively climbed up and went to town splashing and pouring. Yes, the floor got wet. Yes, he got wet too. But the clean up was easy, with a simple swipe of the towel and a quick change of clothes. It was play time well spent.

Swim + bodies = land swimming.

Sounds weird, right? This was part of a game we played at play group where there were "octopus" who had to catch "fish" swimming by. Dear son loved it so much we often land swim around the house. Chanting, "swim, swim, swim," we walk around the living room and move our hands like we're swimming. Hurry, a shark!

Hide + seek = where did it go?

Showing an object and then hiding it under my shirt (or his) is a daily event. "Where'd it go?" we ask each other. I call it training for finding running shoes in his school years.

Books + lap = reading time

Before every nap and bedtime, we read stories. I change up the ones on the toddler reading table (more for my entertainment than his). Currently we are reading Blue Hat, Green Hat by Sandra Boynton and Toupie

Shopping with kids can be an adventure. ISTOCK

No judgement near the frozen waffles

It's 3:30 p.m. Kids, hungry after school, lean against the shopping carts their mothers push down crowded aisles. I watch a middle-aged guy jump the check-out line.

He sees me see him and does a defensive "who me?" shrug. Hurried myself, I bite my tongue, check my list and press on. There is a tall blonde bearing down on me. I do a half pirouette to let her by and hear a little voice, upturned, just finishing a question on the woman's far side. As they pass me I hear her brisk reply: "We are not here for fun. We are here for things to eat."

I pause carefully on the threshold of judgment. I have always tried to avoid shopping-as-chore. We used to make food shopping an adventure, now it is a creative exercise in lunch kit supply choices.

The truth is that shopping is a chore, especially at this hour, especially when your legs are little and everyone's patience is thin. I realize what I am feeling is an empathy wince.

Being a parent is filled with daily obstacle courses, small and large. The afternoon melt-down hours between 3:30 and 6:30 p.m. are a particularly trying sprint. A homework hatchet hangs heavy and urgent over our household tonight, so I keep moving, wedge the freezer door open with my hip, grocery basket biting into my forearm, bottle returns clanking on my other flank. I try to smile at the kids hauling backpacks past me, and nod as we navigate the space so the parents know there is no pressure from me, even if they are in the middle of a teary negotiation in the frozen waffle section.

Judgment is a withering thing under which family life does not thrive. We must allow room for each other. The guy who jumped the line though? He needs remedial kindergarten. CATHERINE JACKSON OF YUMMYMUMMYCLUB.CA

How to mess up the very first meeting

Don't, just don't.

On avoiding the opportunity ambush

VAN BUUREN
careerbear.com

The job interview is one of the most important parts of the job-search process, and one that you have far more control over than you think, says Stefan Danis, CEO of Mandrake. Here are common interview mistakes and his advice on how to avoid them — and get the job of your dreams.

Come unprepared

The job description is usually filled with information about what type of employee the company is looking for, so spend time positioning how your experience and competencies match up. "The bad (move) is you come in and talk about yourself but in no way relate your narrative to what the company is looking for," says Danis. Questions during the interview will invariably relate to the job de-

Don't ask questions

You can extract a tremendous amount of information as an interviewee, says Danis. Right off the top, ask how the interview will be structured — so you know how much time you have and how you should tailor the length and detail of answers. Then, "in a perfect world you would finish every single answer with a query that would reflect back to the interviewer. For example, how is this competency valued within your organization?" Before you leave, ask for feedback. "Most interviewers will share with you what they thought right away if you ask them, but most people leave without asking the question." Ask.

Forget common courtesies

Don't be late. It's disrespectful and reflects on your personality and, possibly, work ethic. Also, turn off your cell phone. Surprisingly, almost 20 per cent of interviewees don't, says Danis. If you forget to turn off your cell and the phone rings, apologize and quickly turn it off pronto. If you are experiencing some sort of crisis that requires you be connected warn the interviewer ahead of time that you might get an urgent call. But the situation must be critical!

Make the interview all about work

The resumé got you the interview, says Danis, and odds are the fit will get you the job. Employers unearth fit by understanding how you go about your business and who you are. Include references to your personal life on your resumé and during the interview. "Some people think life outside of work is not relevant to work ... but I would say quite the opposite, that life outside of work is in fact what gets you the job." Also, the biggest mistake in terms of high performance interviewing is to not create an interactive experience, says Danis. Don't just answer questions and match what the interviewer is asking. Engage in a real back and forth conversation.

Dress inappropriately

Most companies have a dress code and there's nothing wrong with calling ahead and asking what it is. "It's foolish to not look what I call 'one level up'... if you look one level down, you're underdressed relative to the interviewer and you've made a big mistake. If you're dressed like they are, great. If you're dressed one level up, nothing bad happens," Danis says.

Lie through your teeth

Research shows that many people lie about things such as their education, work history and credentials. In fact, education verification is one of the fastest growing segments of hiring, says Danis. "Don't lie about anything. We live in the digital age and you'll be found out — dismissed from a process."

I was on stage delivering a TED talk (a non-profit organization devoted to ideas worth spreading) about how to embrace your inner "advotee" and to help fuel a career with purpose. I was finally able to articulate how everyone's professional contributions could help address society's challenges, and how businesses could integrate social purpose, environmental sustainability, and economic integrity into their operations.

Since then I've been interviewed by Forbes.com and have presented at conferences around the world.

competition in the shootout," Islanders coach Jack Capuano said.

The Senators (12-7-4) have lost three in a row. They also have dropped eight of nine on the road to fall to 3-6-2 away from home.

Both teams had excellent chances in overtime. The best save was a glove stop by Lehner on Hamonic from the right circle. Nabokov made a terrific save on Colin Greening in the opening shift of the extra five-minute session.

Nielsen scored to open the shootout against backup Robin

Lehner. Tavares' goal came after Nabokov made his two stops.

"It's disappointing but we did play well in the second and third periods," Senators coach Paul MacLean said. "Lehner did a good job for us and our penalty killing was very good."

The Islanders (9-11-2) improved to 3-8-1 at home after losing the first three in a seven-game homestand.

"I wasn't 100 per cent but I gave it my best," said Tavares, who was described as "under the weather" by Capuano before the game. "I'm glad we got the win." THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NHL. Kane cans winner as Hawks' streak continues

Patrick Kane scored with two minutes left in regulation Sunday to extend Chicago's season-opening points streak to 22 games. DUANE BURLESON/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Patrick Kane had a couple shots that simply could not be stopped.

Just like the Chicago Blackhawks.

Chicago extended its NHL-record season-opening points streak to 22 games Sunday when Kane scored the tying goal on a power play with 2:02 left in regulation and the Blackhawks earned an extra point when the forward scored the only goal in a shootout of a 2-1 win over the Detroit Red Wings.

"Just amazing what's going on," Kane said. Corey Crawford was perfect in the shootout and finished with 32 saves to help Chicago win a ninth straight game.

The Blackhawks have earned at least a point in 28 straight games dating back to last season to tie the second-longest streak in league history. They've matched Montreal's multi-season points run from the 1977-78 season and trail Philadelphia's streak of 35 straight games with at least a point during the 1979-80 season. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Female kicker tries out for Jets

Lauren Silberman's NFL tryout lasted all of two kicks, neither of which travelled 20 yards.

Silberman, 28, became the first woman to compete at an NFL regional scouting combine on Sunday, but left the New York Jets' practice field after re-injuring her quadriceps. She tried two kickoffs, the first going 19 yards and the second about 13 yards, and then asked to see a trainer.

The former collegiate soccer player was examined off to the side of the practice field. About 30 minutes later, while 36 other kickers continued their work-outs, she called the scene "surreal" and thanked the NFL for "this tremendous opportunity."

67's dropped by Battalion

Francis Menard and Barclay Goodrow each had a goal and an assist as the Brampton Battalion defeated the visiting Ottawa 67's 4-2 on Sunday.

Nicholas Foglia and Matt MacLeod also scored for the Battalion (29-24-9), while Matej Machovsky stopped 19 shots for the win.

Joseph Blandisi and Sean Monahan scored for the 67's (15-42-5), who are now winless in nine contests.

Villarreal's family unharmed in kidnapping attempt

The Detroit Tigers say reliever Bryan Villarreal is not expected to leave spring training after his family escaped unharmed from a kidnapping attempt in Venezuela on Friday night.

Villarreal has remained with the team. Manager Jim Leyland did not want to comment further, saying Sunday: "The less said, the better." THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Horoscopes

Aries

March 21 - April 20

If someone provokes you today your instinct will be to hit back fast and hard, but it would be better if you control yourself. The planets indicate that revenge is unnecessary. Rivals and enemies will self-destruct soon enough.

Taurus

April 21 - May 21

You know that appearances can be deceptive, so don't jump to conclusions today. With Venus, your ruler, at right angles to Jupiter you may get completely the wrong end of the stick, with less than enjoyable results.

Gemini

May 22 - June 21

There are times when you must look out for Number One and this is one of them. If you allow yourself to be taken in by a sob story today you will surely regret it later.

Cancer

June 22 - July 23

You may have bitten off more than you can chew but it's no big deal. As the Sun edges closer to the midheaven angle of your chart you need to be a bit more adventurous.

Leo

July 24 - Aug. 23

Decide what is of most importance to you personally and focus all your energy on that one thing. Others may say you are being selfish, and maybe you are, but since when has that been a crime?

Virgo

Aug. 24 - Sept. 23

Are you happy with the way your life is going? If not you must do something about it. A big wave of change is coming and if you are ready, you can ride it to success.

Libra

Sept. 24 - Oct. 23

You may get quite upset today, especially if you see some sort of injustice taking place. But don't get too emotional because your job is to find a practical solution.

Scorpio

Oct. 24 - Nov. 22

The planets warn you should be on your guard, especially when dealing with business and financial matters. If someone sees that you want something badly enough they will push up the price.

Sagittarius

Nov. 23 - Dec. 21

Don't change things when you don't have to. With Jupiter, your ruler, so active at the moment all you have to do is be yourself and keep doing what you already do so well. You're on the cusp of success already.

Capricorn

Dec. 22 - Jan. 20

There are things going on behind the scenes that are going to affect you in a big way over the next few weeks. For that reason alone you must not commit yourself.

Aquarius

Jan. 21 - Feb. 19

However anxious you may be about a certain situation there is no need to change what you are doing. Time is on your side and Lady Luck will sooner or later act in your favor.

Pisces

Feb. 20 - March 20

Be careful when dealing with employers, authority figures and other important people over the next few days. You may want to impress them but what you don't want to do is come across as desperate.
